My name is _____

Our family is going to have a new baby.
The baby will come after

_____.

When people come to see the baby, they will say hello to me first.

When I meet the baby, the baby might have a present for me.

Sometimes I might want to be little again.
That is OK. I can ask for a cuddle.

Every day, my grown-up and I have time that is just ours. Our special time is

_____.

I am the big one now. I know lots of things the baby does not know yet.

For the grown-up

When to read it

From about three or four months before the birth, and again in the first fortnight after it, when the house fills with people who have come to see somebody else.

The advice here is the same as in our guide to preparing a toddler for a new baby, whose two Raising Children sources were read on 17 September 2026. No story prevents jealousy, which is a normal part of adjusting.
